Excerpt from A Lecture on Some of the Diseases of a Literary Life: Delivered Before the American Institute, August 23, 1832 The subject of education is of the deepest importance to our countrymen. The government under which we live is strictly a government of popular opinion, and if great and untiring efforts be not made to keep the public mind duly enlightened, all our valuable institutions will be swept away. If our citizens should become indifferent to the cause of popular education, the tone of public morals would be lowered, the reverence for religion would decay, and our country would soon be distracted with lawless anarchy, or fall an easy prey to some ambitious and popular leader. No one therefore who loves his country, and duly appreciates the inestimable privileges we now enjoy can be indifferent on this point. The deep interest which I feel in the subject, and my readiness to co-operate with you in this great cause, have induced me to accept the invitation with which I have been honored by your committee; at the same time I can declare with the utmost sincerity, that it is with extreme diffidence that I appear in this place on this occasion. No one will be surprised at this, who calls to mind the learning and acquirements of the two individuals who have addressed you on the former occasions on physical education, the character of the audience before whom I appear, and the extent and importance of the topic on which I am to speak.
