Createspace, United States, 2011. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 203 x 133 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Physically my grandfather was a big man, six-one to six-two and not an ounce of fat anywhere on him. Even though he was big, he never really gave the appearance of being that overpowering. He was by no stretch of the imagination a body builder type. His strength came from years of strenuous backbreaking work. His strong muscular arms were made complete with rough, callused hands the size of country hams. With the exception of Sundays when he wore a drab olive suit with one of those wide flowered small knotted ties, my fondest recollections of my grandfather have him dressed in Osh Kosh (b Gosh) overalls with a pouch of Beechnut chewing tobacco or cigars in the bib pocket, a tan work shirt, laced up brogan work boots, and a straw hat with a dark green plastic sun shade in the end of the front brim. I can almost see him now standing with his right hand clasping his left wrist behind his back, knees slightly bent, with a chew of tobacco in his jaw looking around at the heavens to see if he could detect a hint of a rain cloud. My grandfather was also a unique individual, a heart of gold encased in a rough exterior, that at times could have brought tears to many a grown man s eyes. Papaw, as he was lovingly known by his four grandsons, had the tendency, as long as I can remember, to fuss at the least little provocation, so much so that my grandmother often said, even from the time we were very small, Don t pay Papaw no tention. He just likes to quarrel. This abrasive...
