Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: .brought to the grounds many additional guests, among whom were a large number of graduates and their friends who are especially welcome at this time. At eleven o'clock members of the Senior Class gave interesting demonstrations in Clarke Hall. Clara E. Majors illustrated various ways of preserving milk; Walter C. Webb, Joshua W. Williams, and James A. Harris together presented A Demonstration Agent at Work, showing most effectively the value of scientific agriculture in detecting frauds on the market; Florence Wilson gave her audience all possible points on making a shirt waist; and Milton J. Carr explained the advantages of Rift Flooring. At the afternoon exercises in Ogden Hall four others of the graduating class gave their Anniversary papers. Mabie M. Stephen talked on Art Applied to Homemaking, demonstrating as she talked by completely furnishing an attractive and artistic living-room on the stage, using a rug and draperies woven by students and explaining her color schemes and arrangement of furniture. John H. Calhoun, Jr., gave a strong paper on Hampton's Idea of Educated Men and Women as I have Learned It, and H. Peyton Brown told of An Exceptional Opportunity, describing very modestly her efficient two-months work at Mrs. Barrett's industrial school at Peake, Va., where she took part of her normal training. The last student paper was by Arthur P. Davis, who gave a most entertaining biography of his grandfather, whose life was closely linked with the early history of the school....
